

Learning and Development is a fundamental Human Right

As South Africa commemorates Human Rights Day on 21st March, it is important to remember that learning and development is a fundamental human right. Every individual, regardless of background or circumstance, deserves access to opportunities that foster growth, skills, and knowledge. By supporting lifelong learning, societies empower people to reach their full potential and contribute meaningfully to their communities.

Learning is considered a fundamental human right because it plays a crucial role in the development of individuals and societies. It empowers people with the knowledge and skills needed to participate fully in social, economic, and political life. Ensuring that everyone has the opportunity to learn lays the foundation for a fair and just society.

The Netcampus Group, a leading Information Communications Technology (ICT) Training Company with offices in Centurion, Fourways and Cape Town, provides training in all provinces in South Africa and even beyond its borders. Netcampus has a rich training history and footprint accumulated over the past 2 decades which continues to flourish under the leadership of CEO and Shareholder, Tebogo Makgatho. Netcampus brings a 360° approach to ensure that all learners, whether school leavers, individuals or professionals, are kept updated with the latest technology training solutions leading to advancement and unlocking potential.

“We recognise that skills development is a basic human right. Ensuring access to education and opportunities for lifelong learning is essential for personal growth and for building inclusive, prosperous societies and that is the premise Netcampus is set upon. I am a strong believer in empowerment and training and have a strong drive and passion to transform the ICT sector and break barriers of entry into a predominantly male dominated sector” says Tebogo Makgatho, CEO of Netcampus